The English language is the most popular international language and it is highly used in educational, political, technological and trading affairs. Due to its popularity and usefulness, the language is taught all over the world. Nowadays, there are numerous methods and strategies of teaching a foreign language of which the most important ones are followed: Cognitive, Mnemonic, Metacognitive, Compensation, Emotional and Social. However, the modern technological development greatly affected the way the language is distributed to students regarding online teaching methodology.

There is a huge discrepancy between teaching online and in a classroom since a teacher usually has limited time to ensure that the instructions are effective and the audience has to be provided with the maximum value. Here are five of the most effective strategies that increase engagement and retention.

- The Cooperative Learning - Thanks to the modern technology, the contemporary software allows students to interact between participants and find new solutions to real problems. This method is extremely useful to prepare learners to find new solutions to real problems.
- Differentiation Instruction - Means providing the same materials to all students utilizing distinctive strategies. One of the ways to distinguish the learning style is by letting each learner go through at their own pace.

- Self-Paced Learning - This method allows the learner to control the speed of the course and it helps students learn better as it lets the applicants choose their own style of learning. Even though the course may be a bit longer, the result is always better.
- Multiple Learning Tools - Those are tools that can be used in teaching so as to let the student see, hear, read, write and act out information. Having done the research, it has been noted that learners gain more information when a single tool is used. However, when they are not able to fully engage with a particular style of learning, a mix of tools ought to be used.
- Teacher-Student Interaction - The biggest disadvantage of online teaching is the lack of face-to-face interaction. Nevertheless, live streaming and video chats help teachers to tackle the issue.

Based on the aforementioned, online teaching keeps becoming increasingly popular these days and despite some difficulties, it still appears to be extremely comfortable, effective and popular all over the world.
